Madison Woodall - “I have learned that it is not the mistake you made that defines you, but it is what you did afterward that does. From personal experience I can affirm that failure and success are directly related. You cannot accomplish your goals without making some sort of mistake and learning from it. Denial or reacting badly to failure only leads to more failure and does not help you grow. Since I have had many accomplishments and even more mistakes, I have grown a lot as a person and I hope that reflects good character on my part.”

Anthony Ford - “I think to be a successful person one must combine numerous character traits to form a whole person. There are many things that have formed me into the person I am today. To be a success a person must, volunteer whenever needed. You must be hard working and always complete the job. A person must have a positive attitude and it helps to always smile. Someone who appreciates life and what others do for them is a person who shows character and a person others want to be around.”

Emma Shellenbarger –“When I first set foot in Capac High School I was a different person. I have done some major learning and developing as a person. I was shy and timid, afraid to take charge and fight for what I wanted. Now, fast forward four years and I now hold the characteristics of someone quite different. I am someone with goals and aspirations. I am someone who won’t take no for an answer. I always work hard and as Coach Moore asked, ‘Do my best!’ I try to not only make my life but better for those around me too. ”

Jade DeLong - “I stumbled upon my life’s philosophy one day three years ago: In life you are either a passenger or a pilot. This is the driving force that leads all I do. Many times you come across a big heavily locked door that will lead you to great things and open passageways that you can clearly see blocks the way. But sometimes it is easier to let someone else open the door. I am not going to be a passenger in my own life. I may never pilot a plane but I will always take charge of my life.”

Grant Koehler - “While in high school I have been active in many different opportunities in both my school and at the Tuscola Tech Center. I have been class officer, committee members, joined the athletic boosters, and helped pass out food at the local food pantry. At the tech center I am a member of the student forum and help with many drives to raise funds to help families in our area. These events have taught me to be a leader among my peers, to get them more involved in the world around them, and to listen and respect authority.”

Kaila Gormley – “I am honored to be nominated for this award. I am actively involved in my community, school, church, and everything I become involved with. Through each of these experiences I have learned that dedication, determination, compassion, and appreciation are important characteristics to have to reach my goals. I have also learned that compassion and appreciation for all we have is vitally important to show others we care. These traits will carry on through college and into my career.”

Cody Chapin - “One of the things I have discovered during my time in high school is that I like to help people. My teammates know they can come to me for advice and I will build them up while helping to teach them to improve. I offer my help and services in many ways and like to see my efforts come out with a positive outcome.”
